Gladys Antelo-Allen, LPN

Gladys Antelo-Allen is a Licensed Practical Nurse in the state of New Jersey who brings a decade's worth of experience in the healthcare and social services field with roles ranging in care management as a Nurse Care Coordinator working within the Population Health realm, to a Senior Program Manager within a social service non profit organization.

In her experiences as a nurse in the state of NJ, she developed a passion for improving the health status of communities in need. A longtime resident of the city of Camden, NJ, she first handedly experienced what it was like to have family, friends, and close neighbors struggle with a fragmented system. Through that lived experience Gladys saw nursing as an opportunity and steppingstone to making a difference in healthcare. In her years as a Nurse Care Coordinator, she had the privilege to work in an interprofessional team working closely with community health workers, nurses, and social workers. She quickly learned that in order to help address the needs of individuals experiencing complex health and social needs, it was going to take an interdisciplinary approach.

Serving as a subject matter expert in care coordination and care management initiatives, Gladys has helped support the development of content and curriculum for the complex care field. Gladys also shares her experiences in workflow development and engagement framework to teach and train professionals in the healthcare and social services field that are working with underserved populations. Gladys has years in the project and program management space and has helped scale a locally run program into a nationally recognized and implemented model for Interprofessional education. As a senior program manager, Gladys has had the honor to work alongside side leaders from academia, healthcare, social services and government.
